For nearly a decade, men had disappeared from Toronto's LGBTQ+ Village, with no leads and little action taken by police, the community had suspected a serial killer was in their midst.

A hastily scribbled clue in the final disappearance would point police to a man few would ever suspect: 66-year-old grandfather, landscaper, and mall Santa Claus Bruce McArthur. As detectives uncovered increasingly horrific and disturbing evidence, the ensuing investigation would come to a head in a nail-biting, do or die decision as a man's life hung on the line. The aftermath would bring even more horror as the victims' dismembered remains would be discovered on the property of the client's who had trusted McArthur with their home.

Catching A Serial Killer: Bruce McArthur was filmed in Toronto and is the first true-crime special produced by Peacock Alley Entertainment. The special, which was commissioned by Oxygen in the U.S., is produced by Diana Foley and Ryan Valentini for Peacock Alley Entertainment. James Buddy Day and Carrie Mudd serve as Executive Producers.
